Alexandria Gazette WM. H. SMITH,

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 21.

AN ELF LEGEND OF THE DANES .- In Kundebye, in the bailiwick of Holbeck, an elf had his babitation in the high ridge on which the church stands; but after the people in that quarter began to be assiduous in their attendance at church, the elf was kept in continual torment by the unceasing clatter of the bells in the church steeple. At last he could stand it no longer, and left the place, for nothing has tended so much to clear the country of elves as the ringing of consecrated bells. After leaving Kundetye, the elf went to Fgen, where he resided for some time, and it so fell out that a man who had lately taken up his residence in Kundebye came to Fyen, and met the elf on the road. "Where may you he, when at home?" said the elf. "I am from Kundebye," said the man, little suspecting what kind of person it was by whom he was accosted. "Ay, indeed!" said the elf; "I thought I knew everybody in Kundebye, but I know nothing of you. Will you carry a letter to Kundebye for me?" "With all my heart!" said the man, and the elf put it into his pocket, and enjoined him strictly not to take it from thence till he came to Kundebye Kirk, and then throw it over the churchyard wall, and the person to whom it was addressed would be sure to find it. On this they parted, and the man thought no more of the letter. But after he returned to Zealand, as he sat on the meadow where the Tiis Lake now is, all at once he recollected the elf's letter, and was seized with an irresistible desire to see it. Accordingly, he took it out of his pocket, and after he had sat some time with it in his hand, water began to bubble out of the seal; the letter unfolded itself, and it was with great difficulty that the peasant escaped with his life; for the elf bad enclosed a whole lake in the letter, which was intended to drown Kundebye Kirk and its bells, for the trouble they had given him.
